

Arriving at the shore of the milky ocean (kshirodam . . . sāgarāṃ, v. 16289), Rāma thought of means of crossing it. He and Lakshmaṇa lay down on the seashore, the Ocean appeared to him in a vision and said: "I also have sprung from the race of Ikshvāku; the monkey Nala is a son of Tvaṣṭṛ, whatever he will throw into my waters I will support." Nala then built a bridge, which to this day is known as Nalasetu. At this time Vibhishana with four of his counsellors came to Rāma. Sugrīva suspected him to be a spy, but Rāma installed him in the sovereignty of all the Rākshasas and made him his own counsellor and the friend of Lakshmaṇa. It was under the guidance of Vibhishana that the army crossed the bridge in a month. Rāma then caused the gardens of Lankā to be devastated by his monkeys. Ravana's counsellors Čuka and Sārana came as spies and were seized by Vibhishana, but dismissed by Rāma. Rāma then sent Angada as his envoy to Ravana (III, 283).
